Hurricane Harvey & September 11:

Bringing out the Best in Americans

Violence on the right and the left. A Christopher Columbus bust “beheaded” in Yonkers, NY. A long-deceased Confederate general being threatened with exhumation in Memphis, Tennessee. The intolerance of the “tolerant.” All these events of the summer of 2017 make us wonder what is happening to our nation. For those of us old enough to remember, there are many parallels with the summer of 1968, where riots and upheaval followed the deaths of Martin Luther King, Jr., and Robert F. Kennedy. With that said, I guess if we made it through the upheavals of 1968, the social storm of 2017 can be weathered as well.

Then came along the devastating Hurricane Harvey to Texas and Louisiana. In her September 2-3, 2017 op-ed in the Wall Street Journal, columnist, former presidential speechwriter and devout Catholic Peggy Noonan writes on the incredible outpouring of love as those murky waters rose in the Gulf Coast:

There were lots of human chains. And often when they showed people being pulled from houses, the families were all ethnicities and races, the whole American mix – black moms, white dads, mixed kids, an Asian child. On the national level, America always sounds like a constant argument over race. On the local level, meantime, everybody has been happily integrating in the most personal possible ways.

Noonan adds:

The local ABC station caught a young Catholic priest, a French-Canadian assigned to a Houston parish, out in a kayak in heavy rain looking for people who could use a Mass. “I guess this how the Americans were evangelized as well with a canoe,” the priest said, “and this is a kayak. I hope that can bring smiles to a few people.” Noticing the TV cameras, he said: “I guess we’re alive. The Lord is alive, and the Lord is always with us as well.”

There seem to be many parallels between Harvey and the horrible terrorist attacks of September 11, which occurred sixteen years ago tomorrow. Differences were forgotten and people were united. Sadly, as time marches on, it will not be surprising that the left-right conflict, divisions and concerns over statues, “offensive speech” and the need for “safe spaces” will re-emerge. But we are encouraged by the words of the priest in the kayak: “The Lord is alive and the Lord is always with us as well.”

- Fr. Michael Morris

There will be prayers and a wreath-laying ceremony immediately after the 11:30am Mass on Sunday, September 10th at the parish flagpole. Please join us for prayer as we remember the sixteenth anniversary of the attacks on our nation.
